To strive, to seek, to find.

The name has changed a little since I graduated, but the motto is still the same. I remember referring to it during my valedictory address. I can't remember exactly what I said on that graduation day but I do remember how I felt. And I loved my high school days at PCHS!

I'm grateful for the knowledge I gained inside the classroom and especially for the lessons I learned outside class.

When I think of PCHS, I immediately think of all the drama productions and variety shows I had the opportunity to be involved in, and how those valuable experiences helped prepare me for the career I have today. I think of the time spent on the cheerleading and soccer teams and how it helped teach me the value of teamwork. And I think of the hours spent organizing our graduation ball and the leadership skills I developed.

Of course, none of those activities would have been possible without the many teachers who invested so selflessly in their students' lives. I am thankful for their dedication and the teaching that continued long after the bell rang.

Thank you PCHS and LBPSB for everything you deposited into my life and the memories that I will treasure forever.
