What is The Zone?

“What do I need?”

The Zone is a space set up to offer a variety of tools for students to use as they begin learning the important skill set of self-regulation. I use the Zones of Regulation Curriculum to help students identify how they are feeling and then guide them in choosing what tool(s) might help them return to an emotional state best suited for learning. Some of the possible tools that are available in the Zone are: coloring independently, pedaling a stationary bike, taking a few quiet minutes in the teepee, sitting on a bean bag chair with a quiet fidget, using one of the large yoga balls (older students) or the “peanut” (younger students mostly), beading, Kinetic sand, drawing at the “How do I feel?” table and talking about what’s bothering them.

A student may be asked by their classroom teacher to take a break in the Zone or a student may ask independently. Breaks are highly structured and with the specific goal of helping the student refocus and return to class ready to learn. These structured breaks typically take 5 to 10 minutes and each student works independently while working to re-focus.
