Entrepreneur and Community Leader

Sunnydale and Lindsay Place is where I developed strong core values that paved the way for the person I am today.

Navigating teen years was a challenge, however, ultimately I gravitated toward people who encouraged and supported me to do better. This included many of my peers and, of course, amazing teachers.

Two teachers that I would like to highlight are Brian Potter and the late Chuck Poirier. Perhaps the most important gift an educator could have is a love of teaching and their students. My LBPSB school experience is what put me on track to pursue my passion for serving my community and helping young people.

Decades later, I still have a strong professional and personal connection to the LBPSB through my business, the Feed our Future program, a collaborative initiative that provides schools with restaurant-quality lunches for their students.

Most importantly, my children are now students at the board. I am so grateful for all the amazing people that I have encountered over the years. I thank you all and look forward to many more collaborations.
